Student Role: Describe the student's role with the employer and how that role is directly related to enhancing the student's knowledge obtained through his or her qualifying STEM degree.

The student works as an Accessioning Team Runner in a data-focused technical role at Natera, contributing to the development, enhancement, and maintenance of Laboratory Information Management Systems (LIMS) and accessioning web applications used in clinical diagnostics. The student applies Computer Science principles such as software development, system design, database interaction, and workflow automation to support accurate sample tracking, data integrity, and operational efficiency. This role directly enhances the student ' s academic knowledge by applying theoretical concepts from coursework to real-world, production-level healthcare software systems in a regulated environment.

Goals and Objectives: Describe how the assignment(s) with the employer will help the student achieve his or her specific objectives for work-based learning related to his or her STEM degree. The description must both specify the student's goals regarding specific knowledge, skills, or techniques as well as the means by which they will be achieved.

The primary goal of this training is to strengthen the student's practical software engineering skills in a real-world clinical technology setting. Through assigned projects, the student will gain hands-on experience in developing and optimizing web applications, working with structured data systems, and supporting LIMS workflows. The student will improve proficiency in programming, debugging, system integration, and performance optimization while learning best practices for secure and compliant software development in healthcare. These objectives will be achieved through supervised development tasks, code reviews, system testing, and continuous feedback from technical mentors.

Employer Oversight: Explain how the employer provides oversight and supervision of individuals filling positions such as that being filled by the named F-1 student. If the employer has a training program or related policy in place that controls such oversight and supervision, please describe.

The student receives direct supervision from an experienced supervisor and works closely with technical and operational team members. The employer provides structured oversight through task assignments, regular check-ins, code reviews, and performance evaluations. Training is conducted within established company policies and development workflows to ensure proper guidance, compliance, and skill progression. The supervisor monitors the student ' s progress, provides technical feedback, and ensures that all work aligns with training objectives and professional development goals related to the student ' s stem degree.

Measures and Assessments: Explain how the employer measures and confirms whether individuals filling positions such as that being filled by the named F-1 student are acquiring new knowledge and skills. If the employer has a training program or related policy in place that controls such measures and assessments, please describe.

The employer measures the student ' s progress and skill development through ongoing supervision, structured task assignments, and regular performance evaluations. The student ' s work is assessed based on successful completion of assigned software development tasks, adherence to technical requirements, code quality, and contribution to system functionality and workflow efficiency. Feedback is provided through code reviews, team discussions, and periodic check-ins with the supervisor. The employer also evaluates the student ' s ability to apply Computer Science concepts such as programming, system design, data management, and problem-solving within a clinical technology environment. These assessment methods ensure the student is continuously acquiring and improving relevant technical skills aligned with the STEM training objectives.
